WILD TALES THAT YACHTS WERE HERE

In spite of a wild rumor or two about town this morning, the yachts of the Trans-Pacific Yacht Race are still below the horizon, somewhere to the north and east of Koko Head.

A single whistle this morning, denoting that the line was out of order in the fire-alarm system, gave rise, probably, to these wild stories. People soon had all of the yachts winning in a walk, and even tales of disaster were afloat.

"Do you know the Hawaii is off Koko Head?" asked one party over the phone of W. H. McInerney this morning. Mr. McInerney did not.

A strange craft, small and yawl-rigged, was sighted by some dreamer on Fort street, in his mind's eye, and was presumed to be the Gwendolyn, winning with half her canvas set, in great time.

Then came the terrible story that the Lurline had been sighted, actually towing the Hawaii into port. Think of it! The story was supposed to come from Molokai, off which the unfortunates were supposed to be sailing the ocean blue.

However, there is little real reason for all the trouble and the fabrications, and there seems to be little doubt that they started from somewhere the same source as those tales which recently floated about town in regard to the Alameda.

As a matter of fact, the whistle this morning could scarcely have been a signal for the yachts, as it has been arranged that in case one of them is sighted, the whistle shall blow for one minute. This is a long time, and there will be small cause for confusing this signal with any other.

The lookout to be stationed at Diamond Head to ensure that, night or day, the yachts would be seen as soon as they hove in sight, was out yesterday, and last night, to forestall the very small chance that one would poke her nose in sight. However, they are hardly expected before Friday.

HAWAII & PORTUGUESE

The Hawaiis and the Portuguese teams went out in the big pulls at the Midway last evening, the Hawaiis tugging it away from the Hueloes, and the Portuguese team, after a see-saw contest, winning from the Aloha-Americans. The first defeat was accomplished in two minutes and the second triumph was scored in fifteen minutes. The former was one of the shortest pulls in tug-of-war on record.

Tomorrow night there will be other pulls: Hueloes vs. Poolas, Honolulu vs. O. R. & L., and Alohas vs. Hawaiis.

QUIET SESSION

Oahu's Supervisors met at their regular time last evening, and transacted routine business. Not even the semblance of a sensation arose, contrary to the usual rule. A letter from Wm. Kahlbaum, asking for more pay as a police officer at Waimanalo, was read, and the matter was referred to Supervisor Cox, who was to confer with the Sheriff and report at the next meeting.

Refrigerator Wisdom

When you think of getting a Refrigerator, ask these questions,—and get at the right answers:

Does the Refrigerator "Make Good"? Does it do what its makers claim, or only part of it?

Does it utilize every ounce of ice to the best advantage? Is it easily cleaned, strong, durable?
